SDG1: No poverty

1.3.2 - Does your university as a body have graduation/completion targets for students who fall into the bottom 20% of household income group (or a more tightly defined target) in the country? (domestic)

The student advice and well-being Alnoor team at Alnoor University has put a target that all students under this program should, by all means, finish their studies in time. Alnoor University staff have saved no efforts and time to ensure that all low-income students under this program are successful. Also, the team is keen on scheduling constant meetings with the program students to track their overall progress, problems that they are facing and other concerns.

Alnoor employed 89 of its graduate students with low income in the University

Highschool graduates take the National Knowledge Test and the highest test results allow them to apply for the Bachelor Programs and then get the State Scholarship covering the tuition fee, stipend and cost of living at dormitories. Every year more than half of the accepted students for the Bachelor Programs have the State Scholarship, as the Government continues to increase the amount of Graduate Level Scholarships. Now more than 1000 students from 9000 have the State Scholarship.

Students without Scholarship pay the tuition fees by themselves and not all students can afford to pay the full amount due to social and economic conditions of family budget. Therefore, the University considers all the cases and estimates the possible financial aid for the students depending on necessity. Providing financial support for students is a key priority of Alnoor University and it allocates a substantial amount of funding for different categories of financial aid every year. All categories can be grouped into two subcategories: one covers financial aid for students based on academic, sport, social achievements and the financial aid is given in the form of discounts from total amount of annual tuition fee, and the second group covers the social status of students and their families.

The university has the Committee for Social Support and its members are vice-presidents, the deans and heads of departments who consider all applications case by case at the beginning of each semester and make collective proposals for the President.

Alnoor University is training 3780 College students for the academic year 2023-2024.

Alnoor University encourages students to study and gain knowledge on its campus, in particular, those who are from low-income families.
